

Notes on Contributors

Oga Steve Abah is Professor of Theatre for Development (TFD), and Director of the Institute for Development Research at Ahmadu Bello University, Zaria, Nigeria. He is a leading theorist in TFD, an area in which he has done research since 1980. His current research has focused on the interaction of methodologies, especially between TFD, participatory learning and action and participatory video. Professor Abah is the Nigeria Country convener for the Development Research Centre on Citizenship, Participation and Accountability. His other research interests are in development communication and community development.

Ogho Alubo studied sociology in the Ahmadu Bello University Zaria, Nigeria and in the University of Missouri Columbia, USA. He has conducted research and published on several aspects of healthcare development including inequalities in access and in HIV and AIDS. His recent research interests include the thorny issue of citizenship and national integration in multi-ethnic Nigeria. A past Director of Research of the National Institute for Policy and Strategic Studies, Kuru, Alubo is currently Professor of Sociology in the University of Jos.

Adam Baird is a PhD candidate at the Peace Studies Department of Bradford University. His current research investigates urban violence, youth and masculinities in Medellín, Colombia. Since 2001 he has focused on the Colombian conflict through his work in academia and in NGOs, including Peace Brigades International and The International Office for Human Rights – Action for Colombia.

Carlos Cortez Ruiz, Doctor in Anthropology, is a lecturer on the postgraduate Rural Development course at the Autonomous Metropolitan University of Mexico. For some years, he has been the coordinator of the Interdisciplinary Research Programme on Human Development which forms part of the Development Research Centre on Citizenship, Participation and Accountability. He works from an epistemological, methodological and pedagogical perspective on social change strategies.

Jani de Silva completed a BA(Hons) in Political Science and went on to do an MSc and PhD in Anthropology at the London School of Economics. She received a John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Award in 2001. She is currently working on the nexus between globalisation, violence and the local construction of masculinities in Sri Lanka. She is the author of Globalisation, Terror and the Shaming of the Nation: Constructing Local Masculinities in a Sri Lankan Village (2005, Victoria BC: Trafford Publishing).

Colette Harris is Senior Lecturer in conflict, governance and development in the School of Development Studies, University of East Anglia, where she directs graduate courses in conflict and in theatre and development. Her main research interests are the relationship of masculinities to violence and conflict and the development of transformative grassroots pedagogies emphasising gender identities. Colette was previously a Research Fellow at IDS and active in the Violence, Participation and Citizenship group of the Development Research Centre. She spent much of the 1990s in Tajikistan running a community development project and carrying out research on which she has published extensively. She now works mainly in East and West Africa.

Mo Hume has been a Lecturer in Politics at the University of Glasgow since 2005, where she is co-convenor of the International Centre for Gender and Women's Studies. Her research focuses on issues of violence and gender in Central America. She previously held a post-doctoral fellowship at the Institute of Latin American Studies, University of Liverpool and worked for several years for the Catholic Institute of International Relations (now Progressio) in El Salvador. She is currently working on a book manuscript, entitled The Politics of Violence: Gender, Conflict and Community in El Salvador, which is due for publication by Wiley-Blackwell in 2009.

Carlos Jiménez Caballero is a Psychologist who graduated from the National University of Colombia. Based in Bogotá, he now works freelance. He has 30 years' experience of designing and implementing social and community projects and programmes with young women and men. Recently his work has focused on exploring the scope and means for interrupting the intergenerational transmission of violence.

Patricia Justino has been a Fellow in the Vulnerability and Poverty Reduction Team at IDS since 2005, and has collaborated with the Development Research Centre on Citizenship, Participation and Accountability. She was a Visiting Fellow at the Weatherhead Center for International Affairs at Harvard University (2007–09). Patricia specialises in applied microeconomics and quantitative development economics and her current research focuses on the microeconomic analysis of the impact of violent sociopolitical conflict on household welfare. She directs MICROCON, a 5-year integrated project funded by the European Commission (www.microconflict.eu) and is co-founder and co-director of the Households in Conflict Network (www.hicn.org).

Jennifer Leavy is an Agricultural Economist based in the Vulnerability and Poverty Reduction Team at IDS, with research and consultancy experience in sub-Saharan Africa, South and South-east Asia. Her interests include rural institutions, poverty and livelihoods; work and labour exchange; agricultural commercialisation; social network analysis; and combining quantitative, qualitative and participatory methods in research and analysis.

Rosemary McGee has been a Fellow in the Participation, Power and Social Change Team at IDS since 1999. She has extensive work experience in policy and programme posts in international development NGOs. Her research and teaching focuses in particular on forms of citizen participation in decision-making and governance processes. Her DPhil research was conducted in a violence-torn region of Colombia, as was much of her NGO work, and she continues to work closely on that country.

Joy Moncrieffe is a Political Sociologist and Fellow at IDS. She read for a PhD at the University of Cambridge, where she explored the politics of accountability with reference to health administration and provision across a selection of politically polarised communities in Jamaica. Currently, her research interests include power relationships, citizenship and accountability; politics and inequalities; and history, race and ethnicity. She is applying some of these themes to action-oriented research with children who are growing up in violent contexts in the Caribbean, and selected race and ethnic groups in Uganda.

Ndodana Nleya is a PhD Candidate and Assistant Researcher at the African Centre for Citizenship and Democracy, at the School of Government in University of the Western Cape. He holds a BCom degree in Economics and Transport Economics from the University of South Africa and an MSc in Water Resources Management from the University of the Western Cape. He previously worked in various portfolios in industry in Zimbabwe before pursuing an academic career.

Jenkeri Zakari Okwori teaches Participatory Communication at the Department of Theatre and Performing Arts, Ahmadu Bello University, Zaria, Nigeria. He has been part of the Development Research Centre on Citizenship, Participation and Accountability since 2000 and has extensive fieldwork experiences in using theatre and participatory video as research methods in various contexts in Nigeria.

Jenny Pearce is Professor of Latin American Politics and Director of the International Centre for Participation Studies in the Department of Peace Studies, University of Bradford. She is co-convenor of the Violence Participation and Citizenship research group. She has published widely on issues of social change, civil society and violence in Latin America, including the IDS Working Paper 274 on Violence, Power and Participation: Building Citizenship in Contexts of Chronic Violence. She has recently completed an ESRC-funded research project on Municipal Innovations in Non-Governmental Public Participation, UK/Latin America.

Lisa Thompson is a Professor at the School of Government at the University of the Western Cape, where she heads the African Centre for Citizenship and Democracy. Her research specialisation is international development and the impact of the global political economy on micro-development contexts. Since 2000, Lisa has been the Research Leader of the South African team in the Development Research Centre on Citizenship, Participation and Accountability.

Elsa Valli worked as a Research Assistant at IDS in 2007. Currently, she is Monitoring and Evaluation Officer for UNAIDS in Ethiopia. She holds a Master's in Development Economics from the University of Sussex and a Degree in Economics from Università Bocconi, Italy. Her research interests focus on microeconomic analysis of conflict, poverty, social transfers, and HIV/AIDS.

Joanna Wheeler is a doctoral candidate at the Institute of Development Studies (IDS), researching violence and citizenship using participatory methodologies. She has worked for over ten years with NGOs and research initiatives in Brazil, Argentina and the USA on issues of citizenship, gender and rights. Since 2003 she has been the Research Manager for the Development Research Centre on Citizenship, Participation and Accountability, a collaborative international research network. Her recent publications include Rights, Resources and the Politics of Accountability, co-edited with Peter Newell in 2006 (London: Zed Books), and Creating Spaces for Engagement: Understanding Research and Social Change, DRC Working Paper, 2007.