

Notes on Contributors*

Robin Luckham is an Emeritus Fellow of the Institute of Development Studies, where he has been based on and off since 1974. He began his academic career in Nigeria in the 1960s and wrote a book on The Nigerian Military (Cambridge University Press, 1971). He has taught or held research positions at Ahmadu Bello University, Nigeria; University of Manchester, UK; Harvard University, United States; University of Ghana; and Australian National University. He has worked on militarisation and on disarmament and development since the 1970s. In recent years, he has turned his attention to democratisation, to peace-building, to security governance, and to violent conflict, and has published extensively on all these topics.

Note

* Biographies for contributors to the archive articles are not available.

This page is intentionally left blank