

Notes on Contributors

Nina J. Best is a research student at the Getulio Vargas Foundation in São Paulo, and the assistant coordinator of the international research coordinated by the LogoLink network based at the Pólis Institute. She holds a BA in Political Science and Latin American Studies from McGill University (2005), and has worked with youth NGOs, PeaceChild International on issues of local youth-led economic development and the Environmental Youth Alliance. Before joining LogoLink in 2008, Nina worked with the University of British Colombia (UBC) and local governments in the São Paulo metropolitan region on a project to promote intergovernmental cooperation for poverty reduction.

Imraan Buccus is Research Fellow at the School of Politics at the University of KwaZulu Natal. He is also a PhD Research Fellow at the Centre for International Development Issues, Radboud University, Nijmegen in the Netherlands. Imraan is the editor of Critical Dialogue, a journal on public participation in governance, and his academic interests include issues around civil society and poverty, participatory democracy, social accountability and local governance. Imraan is also a columnist with The Mercury, Durban's popular morning newspaper and is currently an Open Society Foundation Media Fellow.

Patrícia Cobra gained her degree in Architecture from the Faculty of Architecture and Urbanism of University of São Paulo (FAUUSP) in 2007, and a postgraduate degree in Land Policies and the Real Estate Market from the National University of Colombia and Lincoln Institute of Land Policy in 2008. She participated in and coordinated the 'Cortiço Vivo' project, and was involved in dealing with slum urbanisation, urban planning and formal and informal real estate markets. Patrícia has worked at the Pólis Institute with the Urbanism group since 2007 and is a researcher at FAUUSP's Urban Planning Lab. She is a consultant for housing plans in the municipalities of the São Paulo metropolitan region.

Jude Esguerra III holds an MA in Economics from the University of the Philippines. He is president of the Institute for Popular Democracy (IPD). He is also an active member of the Local Government Committee of the Akbayan Party and of the Project Management Committee of the Baranggay-Bayan Governance Consortium in the Philippines. In the past five years, his research has had a strong focus on community co-financing in the delivery of municipal services, especially in water and health. He has also been studying the contrasting impact on local level political dynamics of decentralisation in the context of continuing local level involvement of different national government ministries.

Marisa Glave Remy holds a BA in Sociology from the Catholic University of Peru (PUCP), and is currently undertaking an MA in Public Policy Management with the University of Barcelona. At present, Marisa is Regidora of the Lima Metropolitan government. Her research interests are political institutions and organisations, power and development in rural societies, and social conflict analysis.

Romeo Grompone Grille studied Law and Social Sciences at the University of the Republic in Uruguay, and Sociology at the Catholic University of Peru (PUCP). He is a researcher at the Institute for Peruvian Studies (IEP) and a Political Science professor at PUCP. Previously, Romeo taught postgraduate studies in Social Sciences and Anthropology at the Universidad Mayor de San Marcos in Lima, Peru. His interest areas are the political system, the relationships between politics and society, and society and culture.

David Hemson is a Research Director at the Centre for Service Delivery of the Human Sciences Research Council and has a PhD in Sociology from the University of Warwick. David has published in the fields of dock labour, social history, literary analysis, gender analysis, public-private partnerships and water delivery.

He has a keen interest in the possibilities of transformation through public participation to ensure local democracy and effective delivery in rural areas.

Naomi Hossain is a Political Sociologist and a Research Fellow in the Participation, Power and Social Change Team at IDS. She previously led the Governance Research Group at BRAC's Research and Evaluation Division in Dhaka, Bangladesh. Her research has focused on the politics of poverty, including extensive work on elite attitudes to poverty, the governance of service delivery, and the politics of mass education. Ongoing research projects include work on the social impacts of economic crisis.

Kaushal Kumar Jha has a PhD in Agricultural Extension from the Institute of Agricultural Sciences (IAS), Banaras Hindu University (BHU) in Varanasi, India (1999). He specialises in Agricultural Extension Education and Rural Development and has been a senior Assistant Professor in research and extension at the Department of Rural Development and Planning (SASRD), Nagaland University. He is also associated with the National Agricultural Innovation Project (NAIP). He has recently completed the UNDP project on Impact of NREGA (National Rural Employment Guarantee Act) in Nagaland. He has published research in national and international journals. His research interests lie in entrepreneurship development, training for development, impact assessment, local governance and development policy.

Margaret Kasiko is an activist, researcher and trainer. She holds an MA in Gender and Women's Studies (1999) and a BA in Education (1995) from Makerere University, Kampala. She is currently the Regional Programme Manager, East, Central and Southern Africa, Sightsavers International and was an associate researcher for DENIVA (Development Network of Indigenous Voluntary Associations) and development Research and Training in Uganda. She has specialised experience in poverty assessment, gender analysis and mainstreaming social development issues of gender, HIV/AIDs, governance and environmental issues. Margaret was a member of the Poverty Eradication Action Plan (PEAP) team which led the process of developing the 2004 National Poverty Eradication Action Plan for Uganda.

Ming Zhuang is a Researcher and Representative of the China Urban Participatory Governance Network, a LogoLink China partner. His major research areas are the rural migrants in China, citizen participation in local community governance, rural development, and the overlapped area of development of disadvantaged groups and civic engagement. He has over eight years' experience of development research and fieldwork in less-developed regions of mainland China. He is now a Ford Foundation China Fellowship Program PhD candidate in Social Development and Public Policy.

Kazuo Nakano holds an MA in Architecture and Urbanism from the University of São Paulo, and specialises in urban and environmental management at the Institute for Housing and Urban Development (HIS) in Rotterdam, the Netherlands. He was Project Manager for the Ministry of Cities in Brazil (2004–05), and is currently a senior researcher at the Pólis Institute, working primarily with participatory master plans, social inclusion – exclusion analyses, planning and management of intra-urban spaces, composite social indicators and Brazilian cities. Kazuo is currently a PhD candidate at the University of Campinas (UNICAMP) in São Paulo, Brazil.

Harriet Namisi holds an MA in Rural Society and Community Development from the University of Nairobi, Kenya and a BA (Social Sciences) from Makerere University in Kampala, Uganda. Harriet is the Programme Coordinator for Policy Analysis and Governance issues in DENIVA. She has been highly involved in promoting citizen participation through local government structures and building synergies with the national institutions. She has initiated efforts towards cross national networking at regional level with the East African Community, as well as working on crosscutting issues such as NGO accountability issues with an emphasis on self regulation. Harriet is also the National Coordinator for CIVICUS Civil Society Index Project in Uganda, as well as the Regional Coordinator for Eastern Africa for the 2008–09 'Views from the Frontline' review process with the Global Network of Civil Society Organisations for Disaster Reduction.

Cuauhtémoc Paz Cuevas holds an MA in Regional Development from the North Border College in Tijuana, Mexico, and a BA in Public Administration from the National University of Mexico. Cuauhtémoc is Director of the Centre for the Professionalization of Local Governments in Latin America (PROLOCAL). He works as a researcher in themes relating to municipal governments and their relations with local communities, and is part of the Network of Mexican Local Government Researchers (IGLOM).

Lizandra Serafim is a Social Scientist and Researcher in public policy, citizen participation and social movements in Latin America. She holds an MA in Political Science from the University of Campinas (UNICAMP) in São Paulo, Brazil, and is currently a PhD candidate in Social Science with UNICAMP. Throughout her career, Lizandra has been involved in research projects with the Brazilian Center for Planning and Analysis (CEBRAP) and the Pólis Institute, where she coordinated the Latin American regional LogoLink network.

Kamleshwar Singh is a development professional with an MA in Sociology and Rural Development. He has worked extensively in the sector, on participation and local governance aspects, participatory planning, research and training methodologies, monitoring and evaluation, leadership development of the marginalised (Scheduled Caste, women and tribal), social forestry, watershed development, and microcredit. He has been actively involved in advocacy, capacity building training and workshops for NGOs, elected representatives, state governments and local government institutions. As the Manager of the Society for Participatory Research in Asia (PRIA), New Delhi, he is currently heading a campaign on governance reforms and demand for devolution of powers to local government institutions.

Peter K. Spink is a Full Professor of Public Administration and Government at the Getulio

Vargas Foundation, São Paulo, and head of the Center for Public Administration and Government. His areas of research include social innovation, local development and poverty reduction and relationships between government and civil society. Among his publications in English are Reforming the State: Managerial Public Administration in Latin America (with Luiz Carlos Bresser Pereira; Lynne Rienner, 1999) and Governance in the Americas: Decentralization, Democracy and Subnational Government in Brazil, México and the USA with Victoria Rodriguez, Peter Ward and Robert Wilson (University of Notre Dame Press, 2008).

Karina Uzzo is a Lawyer, holds an MA in Biodiversity from the CEU University in Seville, Spain, and is currently a PhD candidate in Development and Human Rights with the University of Seville. She has undertaken a number of capacity-building, advocacy and legal counselling projects in the public policy areas of urban planning, democratic management, land regularisation, environment and housing in a number of Brazilian, Angolan and Congolese cities, for both public administrators and civil society organisations. She currently works in the Right to the City team of the Pólis Institute.

Enrique Villanueva heads the local governance department at the Institute for Popular Democracy (IPD) where he is presently focused on the work of helping to identify and address the risks faced by communities who are engaged with local governments in the delivery of municipal services. This work, especially in water service delivery, socialised housing, and labour-intensive community infrastructure, leads him to concentrate on research and community organising efforts to achieve bankability for community initiatives and organisational capacity building for internal governance, especially with groups in urban poor settlements.