

Notes on Contributors

Paz Arancibia is studying a Masters in Governance and Development at the Institute of Development Studies (IDS) at the University of Sussex. She has a Bachelor Degree in Political Science and Sociology at the Universidad Complutense of Madrid. She has more than 12 years of professional experience in the field of development. She has worked for several NGOs, and for the United Nations in a wide variety of contexts in Latin America, North and sub-Saharan Africa. Her fields of expertise include civil society, institutional building and more recently, organisational change within the UN reform.

Laura Bolton has a background in economics and specialises in statistical analysis and research. She is an editor within Knowledge Services at IDS and has significant experience in monitoring and evaluation for the department. She is currently expanding into the area of environmental economics.

Sarah Cook is a Research Fellow at IDS. Her research focuses on the social consequences of economic reform in China. She is Director of a research programme on Social Protection in Asia. Other current projects include work on informal employment, social welfare and public service provision in China.

Mark Davies is a manager of the Centre for Social Protection at IDS, having previously worked with the UK Department for International Development in Africa and London as a livelihoods advisor. He has practical and research experience working in social protection, food security, livelihoods, poverty and vulnerability. He has worked extensively in Ghana, Kenya and Malawi, working within bilateral agencies, multilateral organisations, in close partnership with government and NGOs. Mark has an in-depth knowledge of the policies, institutions and processes that influence both social protection policy and programming.

Ricardo Gottschalk is an economist with long-term experience in applied quantitative work and macroeconomic policy analysis. He has worked extensively on topics such as capital flows to developing countries, the macroeconomic framework of Poverty Reduction Strategy Papers (PRSPs) and developing country responses to shocks. He has worked as consultant to the European Commission, G-24, the UN Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), (UN Development Programme (UNDP), the UN Research Institute for Social Development (UNRISD) and the governments of various sub-Saharan African countries, including Ethiopia, to whom he has provided technical assistance on macroeconomic modelling and forecasting. He was an IDS Research Fellow between February 1999 and April 2009, and currently holds a Senior Lecturer position at the Middlesex University Business School.

Jing Gu has a substantial background in the judicial profession and in business in China. She is an elected Council Member of the British Association of Chinese Studies, an invited speaker at international conferences and workshops, and has acted as a governmental and NGO consultant. She has undertaken extensive research fieldwork across China and Africa. Her research interests include China and development policy, governance and accountability and trade and sustainable development. Currently, she is leading a major research project on China and Africa's development policy including Chinese Investment in Africa.

Naomi Hossain is a political sociologist and a Research Fellow in the Participation, Power and Social Change team at IDS. Her research has focused on the politics of poverty, particularly elite attitudes and the politics of public service delivery.

John Humphrey is a Professorial Fellow at IDS and team leader of the Globalisation Team. He has worked extensively on how inter-firm linkages operate in international trade, with particular specialisation in the horticulture and automotive industries. He is a co-founder and convener of the Global Value Chain Initiative.

Rakhil Kahlon is presently working as an officer of the Himachal Pradesh Administrative Services, India and was deputed by the Government of India for an MA in Governance and Development at IDS. His main research interest lies in delivering efficient, transparent, responsive services.

Nobuhiro Komoto is a Masters student at IDS. He has worked for the Ministry of Economy, Trade and Industry of Japan since 2004. His specialisation has been the reform of corporate tax to promote growth and innovation and the industrial policies on manufacturing industries to enhance their competitiveness in the global economy. He graduated from the Civil Engineering department, University of Tokyo in 2004 and also studied in the University of California, Berkeley and the Beijing University of Post and Telecommunication.

Neil McCulloch is an economist specialising in the analysis of poverty in developing countries and the linkages between poverty and both global and local economic reform. Neil has led research on the Rural Investment Climate in Indonesia and has worked on the relationship between growth and poverty reduction in that country. He has also co-written a book entitled Trade Liberalisation and Poverty: A Handbook, for the UK Department for International Development (DFID), which provides a comprehensive analysis of the evidence linking trade liberalisation and poverty and guidelines for how policymakers can ensure that policies of economic integration are pro-poor.

J. Allister McGregor has a background in economics and social anthropology and specialises in studying the ways that systems of governance and the formulation and implementation of development policies impact upon poor people. His most recent work has been on conceptualising and operationalising a social conception of wellbeing, both as a way of critically analysing the persistence of poverty and as a means of re-evaluating development policy and practice. He is the author of the introduction and concluding chapters in Wellbeing in Developing Countries: from Theory to Research (Cambridge University Press 2007).

Mary Munyi has background studies in BA Anthropology from the University of Nairobi, Kenya, and is currently studying for an MA at

IDS. She has seven years' experience working in community development projects in Nairobi, Kenya. Her interest is in the area of youth and development, and she considers youth mentorship programmes to be of great importance. Mary believes that more equal opportunities should be granted to children and youths in education as a development focus, particularly to prepare them to overcome the intergenerational poverty cycle.

John Myers has worked, since 1991, in Humanitarian Aid with a number of international NGOs, the UN and EU institutions. His work has been based in Afghanistan, Burundi, The Democratic Republic of the Congo and Mozambique. He holds a BSc in Development Studies from the University of East Anglia, and is currently completing an MA in Governance and Development at IDS.

Tonaina Ngororano is completing a Masters in Governance and Development at IDS. Previously, she worked for the African Development Bank in Tunis as a socioeconomist, involved in the preparation, appraisal and supervision of development projects in eastern and western Africa. In this capacity she has worked in various sectors including human development, agriculture and rural development and governance. Tonaina has an undergraduate degree from the University of Sussex in Development Studies and French, and a postgraduate degree from the London School of Economics in Social Policy and Planning in Developing Countries.

George Omondi is completing a Masters degree in Governance and Development at IDS. He is on leave from the African Research and Resource Forum (ARRF), Kenya, where he works on regional dimensions of national development policies in the East African Community (EAC) and state-reconstruction in Southern Sudan. He holds a Bachelors degree in Economics from the University of Dar es Salaam and a postgraduate diploma in Project Planning and Management from the University of Nairobi. His academic interests are in governance in highly polarised societies and the political economy of policy reforms.

Sherman Robinson is a Research Fellow at IDS. His research interests include international trade, macroeconomic policy and income distribution. He worked at the International Food Policy Research Institute (IFPRI) 1993–2004, as Director of the Trade and Macroeconomics Division (1993–2003), and Institute Fellow (2003–2004). Previously, he was Professor of Agricultural and Resource Economics at the University of California, Berkeley. He has worked as consultant at the World Bank and held appointments at the US Department of Agriculture; the US Congressional Budget Office and the President's Council of Economic Advisers (Clinton administration), on international trade issues.

Anna Schmidt is Research Fellow in the Governance Team at IDS. She conducts academic and policy research across a range of international relations and political governance issues. Her particular research interests are the theory and politics of international organisations, humanitarian aid and forced migration as well as social network theory. Her regional focus is on sub-Saharan Africa. From 2006–07, she was Jean Monnet Fellow at the European University Institute in Florence.

Prabal Sepaha is a science graduate from Bhopal University, Bhopal. He then studied economics and law at the Devi Ahilya Vishwavidyalaya, Indore. In 1993, he joined the Madhya Pradesh State Administrative Service (MPSAS), in India and has several years' field experience, particularly in land revenue administration, rural development, urban administration, literacy mission, water shed management and urban water supply systems. He is currently pursuing a Masters course in Governance and Development at IDS.

Andy Sumner is a Fellow of the VPR Team at IDS and a cross-disciplinary economist. His work relates to the intersection of poverty, vulnerability and policy processes in three areas: (1) pro-poor policy processes, policy influence and the evidence-policy interface; (2) childhood and inter-generational transmission(s) of multi-dimensional vulnerability and wellbeing and (3) future(s) mapping, multiple crises, the MDGs and development after the MDGs. Andy has worked for DFID, International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD), SCF (Save the Children), UNICEF, UNDP and the World Bank Institute (WBI). His work has focused on Ethiopia, Tanzania, Uganda, India, Indonesia and Vietnam. He is Head of Graduate Programmes at IDS.

Dirk Willenbockel is an economist with a PhD from the London Business School. He has been a Research Fellow at IDS since 2006 and was previously at Middlesex University London and the Science Centre Berlin (WZB). His current research focuses on trade, growth and development and on the economics of climate change impacts and adaptation in low-income countries. Recent work in these areas include projects for the World Bank, the European Commission, the International Labour Office (ILO) and the UN World Food Programme. He has published widely on applied quantitative trade and fiscal policy analysis.

Sara J. Wolcott is an MA student within the KNOTS (Knowledge, Technology & Society) team at IDS. During her time at IDS, she started the Moral Economy Working group and has been engaged in integrating 'green' solutions to responses to the financial crisis. Outside of IDS, she is the Editor in Chief for JustMeans.com. Originally trained in anthropology, she worked in media in East Africa and the USA, and has worked in think tanks, NGOs, and not-for-profit organisations. She is also a public speaker and poet.

Kim Yeojeong was Chief of Staff to Song Young Kil, the National Assembly, between 2007 and 2008, responsible for the policy process on international affairs, North Korea Nuclear Crisis, EU-Korea Free Trade Parliamentary Study Group and US-Korea Free Trade Parliamentary Study Group. Previously, he was Director of International Relations, Uri Party, Seoul and handled international media correspondence. In 2002, he was Officer of International Relations for President Candidate Noh Moo Hyun, New Millennium Democratic Party, Seoul. He was also correspondent for the JoongAng Daily Newspaper, dealing with reporting on the East Timor Referendum Process and deployment of the Korean Peace Keeping Force in East Timor.