

Brief supporting Evidence Report 103

POLICY AUDIT: SEXUALITY AND DISABILITY IN POLICIES AFFECTING CHINESE PEOPLE WITH DISABILITIES

Sexuality, Poverty and Law

Zhen Li and He Xiaopei

December 2014

The IDS programme on Strengthening Evidence-based Policy works across six key themes. Each theme works with partner institutions to co-construct policy-relevant knowledge and engage in policy-influencing processes. This material has been developed under the Sexuality, Poverty and Law theme.

The development of this material has been led by the Institute of Development Studies, UK, and Pink Space Sexuality Research Centre, China, who jointly hold the copyright.

The material has been funded by UK aid from the UK Government, however the views expressed do not necessarily reflect the UK Government's official policies.

AG Level 2 Output ID: 221

POLICY AUDIT: SEXUALITY AND DISABILITY IN POLICIES AFFECTING CHINESE PEOPLE WITH DISABILITIES

Zhen Li and He Xiaopei
Pink Space Sexuality Research Centre, China

December 2014

This is an Open Access publication distributed under the terms of the Creative Commons Attribution License, which permits unrestricted use, distribution, and reproduction in any medium, provided the original author and source are clearly credited.

First published by the Institute of Development Studies in December 2014
© Institute of Development Studies/Pink Space Sexuality Research Centre 2014

IDS is a charitable company limited by guarantee and registered in England (No. 877338).

Researchers at Pink Space believe that in the current context in China, we are seeing the re-emergence of traditional patriarchal attitudes and behaviour. We assert that the heterosexual male is privileged in terms of sex, love, marriage, family and other aspects of social life, where heterosexual relationships and gender conformity are privileged over same-sex relationships, and gender non-conformity. In addition, as we outline in this policy audit, oppression and discrimination on the basis of gender, sexual orientation and gender identity are exacerbated for people with disabilities who experience significant social stigma on account of their disabilities (Charlton 1998). This can lead to multiple layers of discrimination, for example, for people with disabilities who are lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender (LGBT).

This policy audit examines the cultural, political and economic spheres in China from the perspective of people with disabilities. Through a series of case studies we argue that the heteronormative assumptions that underpin disability policies do not recognise the sexual desires and sexual needs of people with disabilities. Therefore, laws, families and society at large treat sexual behaviours among people with disabilities as abnormal, and the disabled as people who need to be arrested, invisible and even criminalised.

Not only do the current laws and regulations fail to recognise people with disabilities as sexual beings and as having sexual needs, they also give power to guardians to have complete authority to control the sexuality of people with disabilities, all in the name of care, responsibility and law.

These omissions in law result in lack of sex education, services and opportunities for people with disabilities, and leave little space for them to fulfil their sexual needs and desires, but too many chances to get infected with sexually transmitted diseases and/or HIV, and experience sexual frustration and devastation.