

Notes on Contributors

Nana Akua Anyidoho is a Senior Research Fellow at the Institute of Statistical, Social and Economic Research (ISSER) at the University of Ghana and is co-convenor of the Young People and Agri-Food theme of the Future Agricultures Consortium. Nana Akua has a PhD in Human Development and Social Policy from Northwestern University. She is interested in the intersection of policy processes with the everyday lives of people. Her recent research focuses on the pathways of economic empowerment for young people; the career aspirations of university students; and the informalisation of women's work.

Kwadwo Asenso-Okyere is the Director of the Eastern and Southern Africa Regional Office of the International Food Policy Research Institute (IFPRI). He holds a BSc (Honours) degree from the University of Ghana, an MSc from the University of Guelph, Canada, and a PhD from the University of Missouri-Columbia, USA. He was a Professor and Director of the Institute of Statistical, Social and Economic Research (ISSER), University of Ghana, and later became Vice Chancellor of the University. His other work experiences include a stint with the World Bank, the Ghana Ministry of Food and Agriculture, and the Ghana Cocoa Board.

Joseph Ayodele Ariyo is an educator who began his career in 1970 as an education officer in the former Northeastern State of Nigeria. He joined Ahmadu Bello University (ABU) in 1974 and completed his postgraduate studies in Canada at York University, Toronto and the University of Waterloo. Joseph has remained with ABU ever since, except for leave of absence as Provost and CEO of Kwara State College of Education at Oro and as a consultant to the National Planning Commission to develop Nigeria's Vision 2020. His teaching and research interests are rural development, land use planning and resource management.

Asrat Ayalew Gella holds a postgraduate diploma in International Development from the University of Bath, UK, and is currently a graduate student at the University of Bergen studying towards an MPhil degree in Gender and Development. He has also been working with Getnet Tadele as an assistant researcher and co-investigator on a number of research projects focusing on livelihoods, HIV/AIDS and young people.

Michael Chasukwa is a lecturer at the University of Malawi based at Chancellor College in the Department of Political and Administrative Studies. He holds an MA in Political Science and a BA in Public Administration from the University of Malawi. His research interests include governance, local government, decentralisation, the politics of development, public policy, and political economy. Currently, Michael is involved in a research study hosted by the Institute for Poverty, Land, and Agrarian Studies and the Future Agricultures Consortium under the theme 'Transnational Commercial Land Deals in Africa'.

Blessings Chinsinga is based at the Department of Political and Administrative Studies, Chancellor College, University of Malawi as an Associate Professor. He specialises in public policy, the political economy of development processes, institutional analysis, rural livelihoods and local level politics. He is a member of the Future Agricultures Consortium (FAC) coordinated by IDS, University of Sussex. Within the FAC, Blessings focuses primarily on the politics of policy processes in the agricultural sector.

Jennifer Leavy is an economist whose research focuses on the intersection of economic, social and cultural life in the context of rural livelihoods in sub-Saharan Africa, drawing on anthropological and sociological approaches. She has 20 years' experience in research, consultancy and advisory work in environment, agriculture and development. Her research encompasses: work and labour; youth aspirations; social networks; poverty, inequality and vulnerability; markets and institutions. Her recent work examines the impact of food price volatility on youth aspirations in relation to farming. Jennifer is a Research Officer in the Vulnerability and Poverty Reduction Team at IDS. She co-convenes the FAC 'Young People and Agri-Food' theme.

Luis Tomás Montilla Fernández is a doctoral researcher at the Graduate School in Law and Economics at the University of Hamburg, Germany. He is a licensed Venezuelan lawyer from the Fermin Toro's University (Barquisimeto), having a master's degree in International Law from the University of Freiburg in Breisgau, Germany. He is currently working on papers related to the social impacts of large-scale investments in sub-Saharan Africa, the effects of foreign agricultural investment in Africa on local farmers, philosophical aspects of investment law, the promotion of human rights in arbitration cases, and international mechanisms to tackle opportunistic behaviour in agricultural trade.

Michael Mortimore researched and taught in northern Nigerian universities for 25 years before moving to the UK and taking up consulting and research projects with the Overseas Development Institute, Cambridge University, the World Bank, UNEP, IUCN and other collaborators. His interest is in the development of Drylands, especially those in sub-Saharan Africa.

Christine Okali is a sociologist whose research focuses on people–technology relations, and the long-term livelihood strategies of individuals and households, especially in the context of rural sub-Saharan Africa. She has research and policy experience in the crop, forestry, livestock, and fisheries sectors with a particular interest in linking social, economic and technical understandings of decision-making in small-scale family farming. She has taught agriculture and development studies in universities in West Africa and the UK, and has worked with national governments in West Africa and Asia, in the CGIAR international research centres, and more recently with the Food and Agriculture Organization.

James Sumberg is an agriculturalist by training and has over 25 years' experience working on small-scale farming systems and agricultural research policy in sub-Saharan Africa and Latin America. He joined IDS as a Research Fellow in October 2009 and co-convenes the Future Agricultures Consortium's 'Young People and Agri-Food' theme. Previously he was Programme Director at the New Economics Foundation and Senior Lecturer in Natural Resource Management in the School of Development Studies, University of East Anglia. He has also held research positions at WADRA – the Africa Rice Centre, the International Livestock Centre for Africa, CARE International and the Gambian Livestock Department.

Getnet Tadele received BA, MSc and PhD degrees from Addis Ababa, Newcastle (Australia) and Amsterdam Universities respectively. He is an Associate Professor at the Department of Sociology, Addis Ababa University, Ethiopia. He has been researching and publishing extensively on children, adolescent and youth health issues such as family violence against children, PMTCT and sexuality and HIV/AIDS. Getnet is currently teaching at the University of Canterbury, New Zealand as an Erskine fellow and previously taught at the Royal Tropical Institute of the Netherlands as an Erasmus Mundus Scholar for the European Master of Science Programme in International Health. He is currently finalising the co-editing of HIV/AIDS in Sub-Saharan Africa: Vulnerabilities, Impacts and Responses, to be published by Palgrave.

Dolf J.H. te Lintelo is a Research Fellow in the Vulnerability and Poverty Reduction Team at IDS, University of Sussex. His research focuses on the dynamics and outcomes of the politics of regulatory and social policy processes, including the role of non-state actors representing the poor. Dolf has a particular interest in issues concerning urban informality, young people, and in social protection and other policy measures that can address hunger and malnutrition. He has worked extensively in India, and increasingly conducts research, advisory work and trainings in sub-Saharan Africa.

Kate Wellard works on livelihoods and institutions in sub-Saharan Africa, and is now based at the Natural Resources Institute (NRI), UK. She has a long association with Bunda College, the University of Malawi and has worked on issues around family and child labour on tobacco estates and the involvement of young people in small-scale irrigated agriculture in Malawi. She is currently producing a series of policy briefs based on the Future Agricultures Consortium's research for CAADP policymakers, including one on Young People and Agriculture in Africa.

Ben White is Emeritus Professor of Rural Sociology at the International Institute of Social Studies, The Hague. He has worked mainly on agrarian change and the anthropology and history of childhood and youth, particularly in Indonesia. He is a founder member of the Land Deal Politics Initiative. Recent publications include 'Gendered Experiences of Dispossession: Oil Palm Expansion in a Dayak Hibun Community in West Kalimantan' (Journal of Peasant Studies 39.3–4, 2012), 'Changing Childhoods: Javanese Village Children in Three Generations' (Journal of Agrarian Change 12.1, 2012), Rights and Wrongs of Children's Work (Rutgers University Press, 2010).