

Notes on Contributors

Khalid Ali is a lawyer and the Director of the Egyptian Center for Economic and Social Rights and formerly worked for the Hisham Mubarak Center for Legal Aid. He helped establish the Popular Committee to Support the Palestinian Intifada in 2000, is very active in the labour movement and the youth movements, in particular the April 6th movement. He played a critical role in liaising between different political forces at the time of the Egyptian uprisings.

Omar S. Dahi is Assistant Professor of Economics at Hampshire College, USA. His research interests are in the areas of economic development and international trade, with a special focus on South–South economic cooperation and the political economy of the Middle East and North Africa. He has published articles in the Journal of Development Economics, Middle East Report and the Review of Radical Political Economics.

Yusery Ahmed Ezbauy is a researcher at the Ahram Center for Political and Strategic Studies in Cairo. He has written widely on youth mobilisation and social movements and is currently completing a doctorate degree on citizenship at Cairo University.

Sameh Fawzy is the Deputy-director of Dialogue Forum – Bibliotheca Alexandrina (Library of Alexandria). He holds a PhD from Cairo University on Social Capital Formation in Egypt, an MA on Governance from the Institute of Development Studies (IDS) and an MA in Accountability in Egypt, from Cairo University. He is a regular columnist in several Egyptian newspapers, has published a number of books, including The Colors of Freedom. The Fourth Wave of Democracy in the World, and has written widely on Accountability in the Egyptian Public Administration, Good Governance in Egypt, the Problems of Copts, Citizenship and Political Islam.

Mohamed Hussein El Naggar is a Programme Officer at the National Democratic Institute in Cairo. He has over 16 years' experience working with local, regional and international organisations, including the Democracy Development Group, Al-Karma for Edutainment, the Cairo Institute for Human Rights Studies and the Arab League. He has experience working with many of the UN committees associated with human rights, such as the special committee on economic, social and cultural rights, the committee on the prevention of torture and the anti-discrimination committee. He has trained non-governmental organisations (NGOs) on the use of international human rights instruments and the writing of shadow reports in Jordan, Morocco, Yemen, Palestine and Egypt. He has written extensively on human rights issues for publications produced by the Ahram Center for Political and Strategic Studies, the Cairo Institute for Human Rights Studies and the Center for Protecting the Freedom of Journalists, Jordan.

Yousry Mustapha is the Project Manager of the GIZ-assisted project, Promotion of Women's Rights in Egypt. From 1997 to 2003, he served as the Executive Director of the Egyptian Organization for Human Rights and the Cairo Institute for Human Rights Studies. He also served as a human rights consultant and coordinator for the Arab Human Rights Fund and the Women and Memory Forum, a Cairo-based NGO. His work experience in the Middle East includes several with local, regional and international Human Rights NGOs and research institutions. He has published several writings and research papers on human rights, citizenship and democracy and identity politics in the Arab region. He is a board member of the Arab Human Rights Fund.

Hania Sholkamy is an Egyptian anthropologist with a PhD from the London School of Economics and Political Sciences, University of London. She obtained a BA and MA from the American University in Cairo (AUC). She is currently Associate Research Professor at the Social Research Center of the AUC and is also affiliated with the Forced Migration and Refugee Studies Programme of the university. Her research interests and publications are mainly in the fields of health, particularly reproductive health, gender, population and qualitative methods. She has co-edited two volumes: Categories and Contexts: Anthropological and Historical Studies in Critical Demography (OUP 2004) with S. Szreter and A. Dharmalingam, and Health and Identity in Egypt (AUC Press 2004) with F. Ghanam. She is currently Regional Coordinator of the 'Pathways to Women's Empowerment Research Consortium' in partnership with IDS.

Emad Siam is a political activist who has been very active in Egypt's Kifaya movement and with student movements. He holds a doctorate degree in economics, and has been involved in developing civic education programmes and inter-faith dialogues in Egypt and beyond. He has written extensively on political participation in Egypt, Islamic activism, NGOs, concepts of citizenship and the future of social movements.

Mariz Tadros is a Research Fellow at IDS. Previously, she was an Assistant Professor of Political Science at the American University in Cairo and worked for many years as a journalist for the Al-Ahram Weekly newspaper. Her most recent publications include 'The Non-Muslim Other in Muslim Family Legislation', in Hawwa 7.2

(winter edition 2009) and 'The Securitisation of Civil Society', in Conflict, Security and Development (March 2011). She is author of The Muslim Brotherhood in Contemporary Egypt: Democracy Redefined or Confined (Routledge 2012 forthcoming), editor of 'Religion, Rights and Gender at the Crossroads' (IDS Bulletin 42.1), and co-editor with A. Costa of 'Quotas: Add Women and Stir?' (IDS Bulletin 41.5).

Ayman Abd el Wahab is Head of the Civil Society Studies unit at the Ahram Center for Political and Strategic Studies. He has written extensively on civil society matters in Egypt, in particular on the law regulating the affairs of NGOs and state-civil society relations. He obtained a PhD from Cairo University examining the role of civil society organisations in democratic transitions. He works extensively with NGOs and youth coalitions in Egypt and the Arab region.

Youssef Wardany is a researcher at the National Council for Youth, the governmental agency responsible for youth policy in Egypt. He obtained an MA in Human Rights from the London School of Economics in 2009, and a second MA in European Studies, with a focus on youth, from Cairo University in 2011. He is currently working as a consultant with UNESCO and NGOs in Egypt.