

Notes on Contributors

Liz Allcock is Country Projects Convenor within IDS Knowledge Services. She has significant experience managing in-country research communication projects, including a number of years in Malawi. Her research interests include human rights and migration and development, particularly in Southern Africa.

Evangelia Berdou is a Research Fellow at IDS in the Vulnerability and Poverty Reduction Team, working at the interface of information communication technologies and development. After obtaining a PhD in Media and Communications from the London School of Economics and Political Science she spent a year as a postdoctoral fellow at SPRU (Science Technology Policy Research) at the University of Sussex, where she developed her expertise in policy, innovation and governance. Her work focuses on the advantages and limitations of distributed forms of problem-solving and coordination for individual and collective action benefiting human development and crisis response, methodological innovations involving the use of new sources of information, and the implications of ICTs for the lives and livelihoods of the poor.

Marc P. Berenson received his PhD in Political Science from Princeton University in 2006. His work focuses on public policy in Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union, with particular attention to the comparative analysis of post-communist governing institutions. He has worked as a research analyst for several organisations, including the American Bar Association, the EastWest Institute, the Carter Center and the Strengthening Democratic Institutions Project at Harvard's Kennedy School of Government. After receiving his BA from Harvard University, he founded and directed from 1996–8 the 'Law in Action' programme for Freedom House in Kyiv, Ukraine.

Danny Burns is Team Leader of the Participation, Power and Social Change Team at IDS. He has previously held various posts at the University of the West of England, SOLAR Action Research Centre, the School for Policy Studies (University of Bristol), Tenant Participation Advisory Service for Scotland, and the Decentralisation Research and Information Centre. Danny is author of Systemic Action Research (Policy Press 2007); Community Self Help (with Colin Williams and Jan Windebank; Palgrave Macmillan 2004), The Politics of Decentralisation (with Robin Hambleton and Paul Hoggett; Palgrave Macmillan 1994) and Poll Tax Rebellion (AK Press 1992).

Dahlia Goldenberg has been committed to supporting the movement of grassroots women's organisations that is GROOTS International and the Huairou Commission for most of her career. She holds an MA in Gender and Development from IDS. With a Fulbright grant, she spent time studying and volunteering with grassroots women's organisations in Ecuador as part of her education. She is currently the Coordinator for Communications at the Huairou Commission and a trainer in the Leadership Support Process, a participatory group process that develops mutual support among women leaders in the face of multiple forms of oppression.

Neranjana Gunetilleke received her training in economics at the University of Colombo and moved on to development studies at IDS where she obtained an MPhil. Formerly the team leader of the Poverty Impact Monitoring (PIM) programme, Neranjana now works on selected assignments with the Centre for Poverty Analysis (CEPA).

Birgit Habermann is a Researcher at the Working Group for Knowledge Systems and Innovation, Department for Sustainable Agricultural Systems and Research Fellow at the Centre for Development Research, both at the University of Natural Resources and Life Sciences (BOKU), Vienna. She has been working as programme coordinator, funding manager and policy adviser, and she has research experience in parts of Asia and East Africa. Her interest is on the role of science in shaping environmental decision-making, and how science interacts with farmers in rural development projects. Birgit is currently also a DPhil student at IDS.

Lawrence Haddad is the Director of IDS and the current President of the UK and Ireland's Development Studies Association. He is an economist and his main research interests are at the intersection of poverty, food insecurity and malnutrition. He was formerly Director of the International Food Policy Research Institute's Division of Food Consumption and Nutrition and Lecturer in Development Economics at the University of Warwick. His field research has been in the Philippines, India and South Africa. He has a PhD from Stanford University.

Spencer Henson is a Professorial Fellow in the Globalisation Team at IDS and Professor, Department of Food, Agricultural and Resource Economics, University of Guelph. He has over 20 years' research experience relating to agricultural development, impact on developing countries of food safety standards and on public attitudes and behaviour relating to food and to international development. He has undertaken research in over 40 countries and worked closely with a number of international organisations.

Wenny Ho currently works as Accountability Advisor for the Europe region, ActionAid International. She has worked most recently as Senior Policy Advisor to the Dutch Ministry of Foreign Affairs with the main focus on strengthening research and knowledge systems. She also has experience working with FNV, the main Dutch confederation of trade unions, for Oxfam-Novib, Finnida and the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) in posts advising on organisational development, strategic planning and institutional development, gender and agriculture and social forestry. Originally trained as a forester, she holds a PhD in International Relations and Change Management from the University of Amsterdam.

Naomi Hossain is a political sociologist specialising in the politics of poverty and social policy. A long-standing area of interest has been work on elite perceptions of poverty and the politics of public service provision, while she has more recently conducted research on informal accountability, crime and insecurity, and the impacts of the global economic crisis. Before joining IDS in 2008 Naomi was at BRAC in Bangladesh.

Jimmy Kainja is a Lecturer and Seminar Leader at London Metropolitan University. He is also an independent researcher with interests in news media, governance, democratisation and development in sub-Saharan Africa, particularly Malawi.

Johanna Lindstrom is a Research Officer at IDS. She is a political scientist with main research interests in the areas of public attitudes to aid and international development; monitoring and evaluation; and gender issues in agricultural development, food security and nutrition. She has an MA in Environment, Development and Policy. Much of her current work is focused on the UK Public Opinion Monitor.

Gayathri Lokuge holds a degree in Languages from the University of Kelaniya and is reading for her Masters in Development Studies at the Faculty for Graduate Studies, University of Colombo. She has done extensive research and advisory work related to poverty and conflict especially in the conflict-affected North and Eastern part of Sri Lanka. She also works as a trainer in the areas of conflict sensitivity, impact monitoring and understanding poverty. At present, Gayathri is a team member of the Poverty Impact Monitoring (PIM) programme and the Centre for Poverty Analysis (CEPA).

Agnès de Mauroy is currently working as Communications Assistant for IBM Europe Middle East and Africa Corporate Citizenship programmes. She has previously worked for the United Nations Research Institute in Social Development researching in the fields of business regulations and their impact on social development. She is planning to do a PhD exploring the impact of the European Union beyond its borders focusing on violence against women in Egypt and Turkey.

Neil McCulloch is an economist at IDS specialising in the analysis of poverty in developing countries and the linkages between poverty, and global and local economic reform. He has led research on the rural investment climate in Indonesia and has worked on the relationship there between growth and poverty reduction. He has published numerous academic papers on the movement into and out of poverty and the effectiveness of different anti-poverty policies. He has also written a systematic review of the evidence on financial transaction taxes, and has co-written Trade Liberalisation and Poverty: A Handbook (Centre for Economic Policy Research 2001).

J. Allister McGregor is Leader of the Vulnerability and Poverty Reduction Team at IDS. He uses his background in economics and anthropology to study how the formulation and implementation of development policies impact upon poor people. His work has addressed a range of development issues including governance and civil society; credit and debt, and poverty in natural resource dependent communities. He is currently working with the Rockefeller Foundation on the roles of international development and philanthropy in promoting human wellbeing in an uncertain and crisis-prone twenty-first century. He is the co-editor of Wellbeing in Developing Countries (Cambridge University Press 2007).

Lyla Mehta is a Research Fellow at IDS and an Adjunct Professor at Noragric, Norwegian University of Life Sciences. She trained as a sociologist (University of Vienna) and has a PhD in Development Studies (University of Sussex). She is currently the water and sanitation domain convenor of the STEPS centre. Her work focuses on the cultural politics of development, water and sanitation, forced migration and resistance, scarcity, rights and access and the politics of environment/development and sustainability. Her work uses the case of water to explore questions concerning scarcity, power, politics, rights and access to resources, the contested nature of the 'public' and 'private' and the cultural politics of development.

Lars Otto Naess is a Research Fellow in the Climate Change Team at IDS. His current research interests include social and institutional dimensions of adaptation to climate change, as well as policy processes on climate change and agriculture at national and sub-national levels. Much of his recent work has focused on Africa, in particular Tanzania, Kenya, Malawi and Ethiopia. He managed the DFID/IDRC Climate Change Adaptation in Africa (CCAA) 'Research to Policy for Adaptation' (RPA), and currently coordinates the Climate Change Theme of the DFID-funded Future Agricultures Consortium (FAC).

Monica Polato-Lopes is finishing a BA in International Relations at Queen Mary, University of London. She worked as a Research Assistant at CAFOD on the project 'What Should come After the MDGs? Voices from the South'. More recently, she has also worked as a Public Policy Intern at Tearfund in the area of Environment, Disaster and Climate Change Policy, where she helped in the research for the report Adaptation United: Building Blocks from Developing Countries on Integrated Adaptation. Previously, Monica worked for the Minority Rights Group International (MRG).

Amy Pollard is the Lead Analyst on Aid for CAFOD. Trained as a social anthropologist, her doctoral research focused on aid effectiveness and the politics of donor-government relationships in Indonesia. She has worked previously for the Overseas Development Institute (ODI) and undertaken a range of consulting posts for the UK Department for International Development (DFID), World Bank and Asian Development Bank.

Alex Shankland is a Fellow with the Power, Participation and Social Change Team at IDS, working on rights, democratisation and citizen-state engagement in health system reform, water and sanitation, local governance, protected area management and climate change policy, principally in Brazil and Portuguese-speaking Africa. His current research focuses on theories and practices of democratic representation and political participation, with particular reference to indigenous peoples and other marginalised minorities.

Nilakshi De Silva studied economics and politics at Monash University Australia and has a Masters in Public Affairs (MPA) from the Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs, Princeton University, USA. Nilakshi is working with the Poverty Impact Monitoring (PIM) programme at the Centre for Poverty Analysis (CEPA) and is interested in issues of development and public policy, and understanding and measuring impacts of development programmes and policies.

Andy Sumner is a Research Fellow at IDS. He is a cross-disciplinary economist concentrating on poverty, inequality and human wellbeing with over 30 peer-reviewed articles and five books published, and is series editor for Palgrave Macmillan's 'Rethinking International Development'.

Mariz Tadros is a Research Fellow at IDS, and a researcher in the Pathways of Women's Empowerment Research Programme Consortium, working closely in collaboration with the Middle Eastern regional hub. Prior to joining IDS, she was an Assistant Professor of Political Science at the American University in Cairo and worked for many years as a journalist for Al-Ahram Weekly newspaper. Recent publications include the Egypt country report for Freedom House's Women's Rights in the Middle East and North Africa (2010) and 'The Non-Muslim Other in Muslim Family Legislation' in Hawwa 7.2 (winter 2009).

Sara J. Wolcott has been involved in innovative approaches to sustainable development in the face of multiple crises for over five years. Following her MA from IDS in 2009, Sara became deeply engaged in the core strategy team of the Reimagining Development initiative. Her work at IDS has focused on climate change, conflict, the poverty impacts of the financial crises, the sociology of finance and new economic thinking. She has a background in journalism and has been actively engaged in multiple start-up organisations to bridge the gap between theory and practice in Kenya, the USA and the UK.